

2021 Member At Large

Name: James Crivaro

School/Org: Kinesiology Department, Penn State University, York, PA

Bio (300 Words or Less):

James Crivaro is currently a lecturer in the Kinesiology Department at Penn State University, York. He teaches undergraduate Wellness, Strength Training & Tennis courses in the Department of Kinesiology.

New courses developed are Exercise for stress Management, Fitness for Life, Physical conditioning. He is also an advisor to College of Health and Human Development students, Coordinator in Kinesiology. He first joined Penn State University-York in 1990 as Instructor and Athletic Director. After 10 years, he decided to pursue other university positions that focused just on Instruction. Having the experiences of working at several universities and colleges such as Millersville University, Towson University, Cecil College, Harrisburg Area Community College, and others, he enjoyed learning the diversity of campus settings as well as demographics. This taught him a lot about “the college student” and even though they came from all over the world, they have a common goal, which is to learn. He was then offered a Lecturer position at Penn State University-York in 2017, where he is currently the Kinesiology Coordinator, and teaches several courses.

During his tenure, he created hybrid courses, used technology in the classroom, created an eBook for Wellness class and continued other projects. Recently, he was offered to present at the NAKHE National Conference in January 2022. His service to the University includes Campus ASIC Member- Curricular Affairs Committee Teaching, Learning Technology Advisory Committee, Commonwealth Campus Kinesiology Department Committee Chairperson.